For changes in part numbers not supported by the original documentation (e.g., due to change in production numbers) the applicants should take care to ensure the validity of their certification since any error resulting in temporary import of an enhanced/upgraded defense article will be considered a false statement and a violation of the Arms Export Control Act(AECA)/ITAR. A change in a part number that results in a change to the defense article (e.g., upgrade) must be the subject of a new DSP-61 license application, supported by new documentation.

Note: Please ensure that the certification has been read since the applicant is selecting “change part number” is also certifying that the change in part number will not enhance, upgrade, or change the capability of the commodity authorized for temporary import on the DSP-61 license.

2) Correct a typographical error. Changes due to typographical errors must be supported by attaching documentation that was submitted with the original DSP-61 submission.
